ABSTRACT

Pacific Resources for Education and Learning (PREL) prepared a summary and brief analysis of the "No Child Left Behind Act of 2001" (NCLB) and its implications for education for the American Pacific region. This briefing paper is intended to help educational leaders understand the law and its expectations and implications for schools, educators, parents, and children. The NCLB is based on stronger accountability for results, greater flexibility and local control, expanded options and choices for parents, and emphasis on teaching methods that work. Freely Associated States' eligibility for grants under NCLB has been reduced. For Hawai'i, federal education funding is increased to more than $194.6 million, Title I funding is increased to more than $38.6 million, and more than $13.6 million is provided to train and retain skilled educators. For U.S.-Affiliated Territories, benefits include substantial set-asides in the new legislation and an increase in federal dollars overall. The territories also gained a Coordinator for the Outlying Area within the Office of the Secretary for the U.S. Department of Education. A table provides a bird's-eye view of funding by title and lists the implications for education in the state of Hawai'i, the territories, the Freely Associated States, and for PREL. (RT)

No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 and Implications for the Pacific Territories and Freely Associated States

By Hilda C. Heine*

As a service to the Pacific educational community and its leadership, Pacific Resources for Education and Learning (PREL) has prepared a summary and brief analysis of the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (NCLB) and its implications for education for the American Pacific region, particularly the Pacific territories and the Freely Associated States (FAS). The U.S.-affiliated territories include American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (CNMI), Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands; the FAS are the Republic of the Marshall Islands (RMI), the Federated States of Micronesia (FSM), and the Republic of Palau (ROP).

The NCLB is a large, complex, and far-reaching piece of legislation that authorizes and sets the direction for the nation's elementary and secondary programs and services over the next five years. Importantly, it is the "cornerstone" of President Bush's education agenda, underscoring its weight and priority for this administration. This briefing paper is intended to help educational leaders understand the law and its expectations and implications for schools, educators, parents, and children.

NCLB, which reauthorized the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA), is based on the following principles.

Stronger accountability for results. This translates among other things into higher standards and mandatory testing for grades 3 through 8. School districts not making adequate yearly progress (AYP) will be subject to corrective actions, including restructuring measures.

Greater flexibility and local control. More decision making for programs has been extended to state education agencies (SEAs) and local education agencies (LEAs). In the Pacific, the SEA and the LEA are one and the same. For example, states are granted up to 50% reprogramming authorities to other programs or to Title I from such programs as Teacher Quality State Grants, Educational Technology, Innovative Programs, and Safe and Drug-Free Schools. The act also includes new competitive initiatives such as the State and Local Flexibility Demonstration programs.

Expanded options and choices for parents. This is accomplished by providing federal support for disadvantaged kids to transfer from failing schools to safer and higher performing schools. This also means voluntary public school choice and school district ability to spend up to 20% of its Title I money to provide school choice and supplemental services, including tutorial assistance to eligible students.

Emphasis on teaching methods that work. NCLB provides substantial support to reading instruction through research-based methods and increases the investment in teacher training and retention. Examples include the Reading First Initiative, which will make six-year grants to states which will, in turn, make competitive subgrants to local communities; and Early Reading First which will make six-year awards to LEAs to support early language, literacy, and pre-reading development, particularly to students from low-income families.

An overview of NCLB's implications for each of the U.S.-affiliated Pacific entities follows.

Freely Associated States: RMI, FSM, and ROP

In effect, FAS eligibility for grants under NCLB has been reduced. By dollar volume, the FAS will get less money than they previously received under the Improving America's Schools Act (IASA). This conclusion is based on several things.

First, the Freely-Associated States Educational Grant Program (FASEGP) under Title I, formerly extended to the FAS only, will now be shared with the Outlying Areas (OA), which in addition to the Pacific territories also includes the U.S. Virgin Islands. The competition for this program allocation is level-funded at $5 million per year. A minimal resource will now be further minimized by allowing others to participate in this Title I set-aside. At the same time, the U.S. affiliated territories already participate in the Title I program at increased funding levels.

Second, there are fewer discretionary monies available to the FAS under NCLB. The FAS were eligible to compete for some of the discretionary funds under IASA, including Bilingual Education and 21st Century Community Learning Center (CCLC) grants. In the case of the latter, funds are now allocated by formula to run competitions for eligible state entities. Current 21st CCLC grants will be funded for the duration of the grant period, but FAS entities are not eligible to compete for new grants. This is unfortunate because this is one of the programs that received a substantial funding increase under the NCLB. While the FAS will be eligible to compete for Title III discretionary funds (formerly Title VII, Bilingual Education grants) until the new Compact becomes effective, they will no longer receive state formula grants.

Third, unless the current language in the NCLB regarding FAS eligibility for educational grant assistance is somehow replaced, RMI and FSM eligibility for any funds received under NCLB will disappear when the new Compact comes into effect in 2003. This will be true for Palau after 2006 when its new compact is ratified. While the term "outlying areas" in NCLB includes the FAS for the purposes of a $5 million set-aside under Title I and any other discretionary program areas under this act, the definition was modified somewhat to reference the prospective new Compact's effect on continued funding to the FAS. Currently, the "bread and butter" for FAS education departments and ministries comes out of federal assistance received through U.S. Department of Education (U.S. ED) appropriations. Discontinuation of this federal assistance will negatively affect education in general and, in particular, positive gains accomplished in past years.

Finally, the intent and spirit of NCLB, insofar as the FAS are concerned, will likely influence other U.S. education legislation due to be re-authorized in the future. The Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) legislation under which the FAS receive special education funds to support their special education programs is one of several examples.

Hawai'i

In terms of dollar volume, the NCLB brings good news to states across the country. For Hawai'i, the legislation has the following impacts.

- Increases federal education funding for Hawai'i to more than $194.6 million. This is $32 million more in federal education funding than last year and represents a 46.4% increase over 2000 levels.
- Increases Title I funding to more than $38.6 million, boosting the quality of education for disadvantaged children in Hawai'i – this is over $9 million more in Title I funding than last year and represents a 71% increase over 2000 levels.
- Provides more than $2.7 million in funding for Reading First. The objective is to ensure that every public school child in Hawai'i learns to read at or above grade level by 3rd grade.
- Requires every classroom in Hawai'i to have a highly-qualified teacher and provides more than $13.6 million to train and retain skilled educators.
- Provides an estimated $2.3 million to help ensure safe and drug-free schools in Hawai'i.
- Provides an estimated $1.5 million to fund after-school programs for at-risk children in Hawai'i.
- Provides more than $3.8 million in funding to help Hawai'i school districts assess how well children are learning and schools are teaching.

U.S.-Affiliated Territories: American Samoa, CNMI, Guam, and the U.S. Virgin Islands

The territories benefit from substantial set-asides in the new legislation and from an increase in federal dollars overall. These entities maintained program eligibility extended under IASA and gained some additional eligibility, including the right to compete for the FASEGP.

Additionally, the territories gained a Coordinator for the Outlying Areas within the Office of the Secretary for the U.S. ED. This newly-created office will coordinate the activities of the U.S. ED as they relate to the territories. This is the role that PREL has helped to fulfill unofficially in previous years for both the territories and the FAS. The new office does not appear to address needs of the FAS, which seems a bit contradictory.

The table below provides a bird's eye view of funding title by title and lists the implications for education in the State of Hawai'i, the territories, the FAS, and for PREL as a nonprofit organization.
