This manual is intended to provide schools with guidance in complying with federal laws and regulations regarding record keeping and confidentiality in their services to students with disabilities. Part 1 focuses on requirements of the Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), which ensures student/parent access to education records and limits disclosures to others. It provides definitions and then summarizes requirements concerning access rights, fees, and prior consent. Fourteen common questions relative to records and confidentiality are answered next. The exceptions to prohibiting disclosure of educational records are highlighted and include a letter from the Department of Education that addresses the issues of transmitting records by fax or computer. Part 2 then addresses issues of privacy and confidentiality relating to working with children with disabilities, including general rules for maintaining confidentiality and protecting the privacy of student special education records. An article, "Privacy of School Records: What Every Teacher Should Know" by Timothy S. Hartshorne and Lyman W. Boomer is included. Part 3 focuses on special education records and considers staff training, content of special education files, acceptance of special education records, case manager/record locator, and record destruction. Sample forms are provided. Part 4 presents the text of the federal regulations to FERPA. (Contains 10 references.) (DB)

FERPA BASICS—EDUCATION RECORDS

The following ten issues are important in understanding the requirements of the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act:

1. FERPA is the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act; the law outlines the requirement of educational record keeping.

2. Personally identifiable information about students must be kept confidential by schools.

3. Each school district must have a written educational records policy.

4. Parents have the right to inspect and review their children’s school records and can request copies.

5. Access to student records by school staff members must be recorded on an “access” log in each student’s file, and the school records policy must identify by title the staff members with access to each type of student record.

6. Release of student information outside the school requires parental consent, except (1) school district defined “directory information” (2) within the public school system, and (3) in health and safety emergencies.

7. Parental access rights transfer to adult students when they reach age of majority.

8. Parents may request an amendment of records that they consider “inaccurate, misleading, or in violation of the student’s rights of privacy or other rights.”

9. Notes concerning a student made by a staff member, retained by that person, and not shared with anyone are exempt from parental access.

10. Education records do not include treatment records of students 18 years or older that are maintained by a health professional.
OVERVIEW OF REGULATIONS

By far the most important Federal statute impacting student records is FERPA, enacted in 1974 to assure student/parent access to education records and to limit disclosures to others for unauthorized purposes. The records of students with disabilities will also be subject to IDEA and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and their regulations and policy interpretations. Finally is State law; most States will have their own requirements setting forth access procedures, copying fees, form of records, retention and destruction schedules.

DEFINITIONS

Director Information: information contained in an education record of a student that would not generally be considered harmful or an invasion of privacy if disclosed. It includes, but is not limited to, the student’s name, address, telephone listing, date and place of birth, major field of study, participation in officially recognized activities and sports, weight and height of members of athletic teams, dates of attendance, degrees and awards received, and the most recent previous educational agency or institution attended.

Disclosure: to permit access to or the release, transfer, or other communication of education records, or the personally identifiable information contained in those records, to any party, by any means, including oral, written, or electronic means.

Education Records: those records that are directly related to a student, contain personally identifiable information, and are maintained by the school district or institution or by a party acting for the agency or institution. The term does not include sole possession records of instructional supervisory and administrative personnel provided that the record is kept in the sole possession of the maker of the record and is not accessible or revealed to any other person except a temporary substitute for the maker of the record.

Eligible Student: a student who has reached age of majority or is attending an institution or post-secondary education.

Records: any information recorded in any way, including, but not limited to, handwriting, print tape, film, microfilm, and microfiche.

FERPA AND CONFIDENTIALITY

FERPA was enacted to ensure the confidentiality of personally identifiable information in education records and to guarantee parents access to their child’s education records. The statute defines “education records” that are subject to its requirements, specifies who can see them and under what conditions, and contains procedures for complaints.
Any educational agency or institution receiving funds under any federal program is subject to FERPA. Practically speaking, therefore, all public elementary and secondary schools and institutions of post-secondary education and many private schools are subject to FERPA.

FERPA WAS ENACTED BECAUSE:

1. Schools had denied parents access to their child's school records, while allowing others—government agents and prospective employers access.

2. Types of information contained in school records was not always confined to fact or derived for educational purposes; innuendo and gossip were often noted.

3. Right of access to student school records varied widely from State to State, controlled largely by common law principles, rudimentary case law, and local policy.

RIGHTS

Parent Rights under FERPA. Either parent has the right to inspect and/or review their student's education record unless the school district or institution has been provided with evidence that there is a court order or legally binding document relating to such matters as divorce, separation, or custody that specifically revokes these rights. (FERPA 99.4)

Student Rights under FERPA. When a student reaches age of majority, the rights accorded to, and consent required of, parents under FERPA transfer from the parents to the student. (FERPA 99.5)

SCHOOL DISTRICT REQUIREMENTS

Each school or educational agency must:

1. Adopt an education records policy and implement procedures that meet the standards of FERPA 99.6;

2. Annually notify parents and students in attendance of their rights pertaining to student records according to FERPA 99.7;

3. Maintain a permanent file on each student;

4. Maintain separate special education records;

5. Provide public notice of directory information and provide parents an opportunity to refuse to disclose such information.
ACCESS RIGHTS

The school shall permit a parent to inspect and review the education records of the student. The school shall comply with a request for access to records within a reasonable period of time, but in no case more than 45 days after it has received the request.

FEES

A school may charge a fee for a copy of an education record unless the imposition of a fee effectively prevents a parent from exercising the right to inspect and review the student’s education records.

PRIOR CONSENT REQUIRED FOR DISCLOSURE

The parent shall provide a signed and dated written consent before a school discloses personally identifiable information from the student’s education records, except as provided in FERPA 99.31.

PRIOR CONSENT NOT REQUIRED FOR DISCLOSURE

A school may disclose personally identifiable information from an education record of a student without the written consent of the parent if the disclosure is:

1. To officials of another school or institution in which the student seeks to enroll provided that the school has a notice in its policies that it forwards education records on request to a school in which the student seeks or intends to enroll;

2. For directory information if the school has given public notice to parents of students in attendance of the types of information that the school has designated as directory information. A parent has the right to refuse to let the agency or institution designate any or all of those types of information about the student as directory information;

3. To organizations conducting studies for or on behalf of educational agencies or institutions to develop, validate, or administer predictive tests, administer student aid programs, or improve instruction provided that the personally identifiable information is destroyed when no longer needed for the purposes for which the study was conducted;

4. To comply with a judicial order or lawfully issued subpoena if the school or institution makes a reasonable effort to notify the parent of the order or subpoena in advance of compliance.

Disclosure without parent consent may also be made under certain other conditions identified in FERPA 99.31.
RECORD OF ACCESS

A school shall maintain a record of each request for access to and each disclosure of information from the education records of each student. The record must include the date of access, the person's name, and the purpose for accessing the record.

A record of access does not apply if the request was from or the disclosure was to the parent, eligible student, authorized school official, a party with written consent from the parent, or a party seeking directory information.

DISCLOSURE TO FEDERAL AND STATE OFFICIALS

Authorized Federal and State officials may have access to education records in connection with an audit or evaluation of Federal or State supported education programs or for the enforcement of or compliance with Federal legal requirements that relate to those programs. (FERPA 99.35)

DISCLOSURE FOR HEALTH AND SAFETY

A school may disclose information from an education record to appropriate parties in connection with an emergency if knowledge of the information is necessary to protect the health or safety of the student or other individuals. (FERPA 99.36)

AMENDMENT

When a parent believes the information contained in the student's education record is inaccurate, misleading, or in violation of the privacy or other rights of the student, the parent may ask the school to amend the record. If the school decides not to amend the record, the parent shall be informed of their right to request a hearing under FERPA 99.21, 99.22.

COMPLAINT AND ENFORCEMENT

A person may file a complaint regarding an alleged violation under FERPA by writing the Family Policy Compliance Office, U.S. Department of Education, Washington, D.C. 20202-4605 (FERPA 99.60-99.64)
1. Question: Are schools required to comply with FERPA?

   Answer: Any school that receives Federal education funds from the United States Department of Education must follow the procedures required by this Federal law. Reference 41 CFR 99.1

2. Question: What kinds of student records are parents allowed to review?

   Answer: FERPA applies to all records, files, documents and other materials that contain information directly relating to a student and are maintained by the school district. Reference 41 CFR 99.3

3. Question: May students see the same records as parents?

   Answer: No. While FERPA permits students to see their own records if they are over 18, there are some records that can be withheld:

   (1) Psychiatric or “treatment” records (Students can, however, request that a doctor of their choice review the records for them.)

   (2) Financial records of their parents

   Reference 41 CFR 99.12

4. Question: If requested, when does the school show the records to parents?

   Answer: Under FERPA, the school has 45 calendar days to comply with the parents’ request. Some schools have written procedures that establish a shorter time period. In this case, the school must comply with their shorter time period. Reference 41 CFR 99.11

5. Question: May parents bring someone with them, such as their child or a friend, to examine the records?

   Answer: Yes. While FERPA does not state specifically that parents have this right, other federal regulations (IDEA) state that parents may authorize others to see the records. The school may ask that parents sign a statement indicating that the friend has such permission. Reference 34 CFR 300.562

6. Question: Who else may see a student’s records without parental consent?
(1) School officials in the same district with a “legitimate educational interest;”

(2) School officials in another school system in which the student intends to enroll;

(3) Various State and national educational agencies when enforcing Federal laws;

(4) Anyone to whom the school must report information as required by State statute;

(5) Accreditation and research organizations helping the schools;

(6) Student financial aid officials; and

(7) Those with court orders or subpoenas. Reference 41 CFR 99.31

7. Question: May probation officers see student records without parental consent?

Answer: Under federal law, probation officers cannot see or receive information from student records without obtaining parental consent.

8. Question: May parents see a list of everyone who has asked for and received information concerning their child during the year?

Answer: Yes. The school is required to keep a list of everyone who requests and receives information with the records themselves. Parents have a right to this information. The list needs not include school employees who have seen the records. Reference 41 CFR 99.32

9. Question: If parents think information is misleading or false, how can they get such information removed from the student’s record?

Answer: First, the parents request that such information be removed and state the reason for the request. If the school refuses to do so, then the parent can request a hearing. The request should be put in writing and sent to the appropriate school official. At the very least, the parent can request the school insert their written statement explaining reasons why they believe the records are inaccurate. Reference 34 CFR 300.564, 34 CFR 300.567, 34 CFR 300.568, 34 CFR 300.569, 41 CFR 99.20, 41 CFR 99.21 and 41 CFR 99.22.
10. Question: Who has access to the student's confidential records?

Answer: Parents have the right to inspect and review the records of their child. Students who have reached the age of majority also have the right to review their records. State education agency staff and school personnel who are authorized to inspect records are those certified personnel and school board members with a legitimate educational interest in reviewing the records. For persons not so authorized to review records, the school must keep a log of parties obtaining access to student records showing the name of the person given access, date access was given, and the purpose for which the party was authorized to use the records. Reference 34 CFR 300.562, 34 CFR 300.571, 41 CFR 99.11, 41 CFR 99.30, 41 CFR 99.31, and 41 CFR 99.32

11. Question: Do school board members have a right to know the names of students with disabilities?

Answer: They have a right to the names of individual students with disabilities only for the purpose of carrying out duties of the School Board. Reference 41 CFR 99.31 and 41 CFR 99.32

12. Question: When a request for transfer of records of a student with disabilities is received, including proper parental permission, should the school transfer all records?

Answer: On notification of transfer, all the student's educational records shall be transferred, including behavioral records and reports contained in the cumulative file furnished to the sending school by other private or public agencies. Reference 41 CFR 99.31

13. Question: Are parents entitled to review their child's test protocols?

Answer: Yes. The school must permit the parents of a student with a disability to inspect and review any educational records relating to their child, including test protocols. The procedure of allowing parents to examine and discuss the protocols in the agency office under supervision would comply with the basic requirement under Reg. 300.562(a). Reference 34 CFR 300.562(a)

14. Question: Who is responsible for storage of student test protocols?
Answer: The school is responsible for ensuring that test protocols are accessible regardless of where they are stored. Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act defines educational records as those which are “(1) directly related to a student, and (2) are maintained by an educational agency or institution or by a party acting for the agency or institution.” A school psychologist would be considered “a party acting for” the school district; therefore, records maintained by a school psychologist would be accessible. Reference 41 CFR 99.5

SUMMARY

FERPA provides parents a clear avenue through which they might ensure that the personal dignity and confidential information concerning their child is protected. It is clearly the intent of this law to provide parents a definite role in the provision of accurate record keeping and in the protection of the confidential information concerning their child.
Exceptions to Prohibiting Disclosure

The following situations allow disclosure of educational records:

- Written consent
- Internal communication
- Medical or psychiatric emergency
- Court order
- Crime at program/against personnel
- Research/audit
- Abuse
- Qualified service organizations
- Third party payers

The next three pages is a letter from the U.S. Department of Education that addresses the issues of transmitting records by fax or computer.
Mr. John Copenhaver
Director
Mountain Plains Regional Resource Center
Utah State University
1780 North Research Parkway, Suite 112
Logan, Utah 84321

Dear Mr. Copenhaver:

This is in response to your April 4, 1995, inquiry regarding requirements related to special education records. Your letter, which you addressed to Dr. Tom Hehir, Office of Special Education Programs, was forwarded to this Office for response on June 28, 1995, because we administer the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), which relates to your concerns.

You ask in your letter whether it is "permissible to transfer special education student records by fax or computer networks." In this regard, you state:

It is not uncommon to see special education student records transferred from one agency to another via fax or computer networking.

You also ask whether it is permissible to include notices that a student is receiving special education services in a student's cumulative file. You state:

Many school districts insert a notice in the student's cumulative file indicating there is a separate special education file located in another office.

FERPA generally protects parents' and students' privacy interests in "education records." The term "education records" is defined as those records which contain information directly related to a student and which are maintained by an educational agency or institution or by a party acting for the agency or institution. 34 CFR § 99.3 "Education records." FERPA applies to all education records, including the records of students who receive special education services.
FERPA does not generally address what education records a school may or may not maintain or where the school maintains such records. Thus, under FERPA, a school would not be prohibited from placing a notice in a student's cumulative records which states that the student receives special education services and that another file exists in another office.

With regard to your question regarding the transfer of education records, FERPA generally requires that a parent or eligible student provide written consent prior to the disclosure of personally identifiable information from education records, except in certain specified circumstances. 34 CFR §§ 99.30 and 99.31. For instance, prior written consent is not necessary when the disclosure is to a school official within the educational agency or institution with legitimate educational interest or when the disclosure is to a school in which the student is seeking or intending to enroll. See 34 CFR § 99.31(a)(1) and (2). For a list of the circumstances under which nonconsensual disclosures may be made, please refer to § 99.31 of the enclosed regulations.

FERPA does not generally address the manner in which education records may be disclosed. While on its face FERPA does not prohibit the transfer of education records to authorized parties by whatever means a school chooses, a school should take into consideration the potential for nonconsensual disclosures of education records resulting from a particular type of transfer. While we believe that the likelihood of an improper disclosure of education records that would result from transferring information to other school officials within an educational agency or institution by facsimile or internal computer network is minimal, it is the responsibility of each school to determine what precautions are necessary to protect education records in compliance with FERPA.

I trust that the above information is responsive to your inquiry. In addition to the regulations, enclosed are a model student records policy and a model annual notification of rights to parents. Should you have additional questions regarding this matter or FERPA in general, please do not hesitate to contact this Office directly. Our current address and telephone number are:

Enclosures
Part 2

This section addresses issues of privacy and confidentiality relating to working with children with disabilities and educational records.

Item 1 — General Rules for Maintaining Confidentiality

Item 2 — Protecting the Privacy of Student Special Education Records

Item 3 — Privacy of Student Records
GENERAL RULES FOR MAINTAINING CONFIDENTIALITY
(INTERNAL COMMUNICATIONS)

The following is guidance with respect to maintaining confidentiality at public schools.

- Written or oral information about student and families is shared only with other personnel who have an explicit need to know for the benefit of the student/family (not for the benefit of the provider).

- Information about one student is not shared with another student or parent under any circumstances.

- Only necessary information will be shared with those who have an “educational interest” in the student.

- Information should not be obtained from a parent or other person based on a promise that the information so obtained will not be shared with other appropriate personnel.

- Discussions concerning confidential information are to take place in secured locations, not in hallways, stairwells, staff lounges or parking lots, on the playground, or elsewhere where others may overhear.

- Confidential written documentation or notes of oral confidential communications should be stored in secure locations, and when in use, should be shielded from the view of others approaching the desk, and should not be left on a desk at all when the staff member has occasion to leave the desk.

- Confidential information should not be left as a message with a secretary, on a voice mail, or on an electronic mail system.

- Confidential information that must be mailed or carried should be placed in an envelope marked confidential.

- Confidential information received by a school that was not requested or needed should be made part of the student’s/child’s record and should be returned to the sender or shredded.

- Confidentiality should be maintained regardless of how the information is obtained (written, oral, electronic).

- All staff and volunteers should be held to the same standard of confidentiality.

- A school should have an explicit policy on the confidentiality of student/child information, which is coordinated with the school’s records policy.
What Every Special Education Teacher Should Know

Timothy S. Hartshorne  •  Lyman W. Boomer

Schools gather a great deal of information, some of it highly personal, regarding each child with exceptionalities. This must be done to fulfill the requirements of the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975 (EHA). When the school conducts a comprehensive evaluation, it gathers personal information on such factors as the child's health, vision, hearing, social and emotional status, level of intelligence, and academic achievement. When an individualized education program (IEP) is developed, it includes the child's level of educational performance along with annual goals and short-term objectives. The information used to make a placement decision must be documented.

Following placement, the special education teacher may conduct a curriculum-based assessment or use teaching probes to gather further information regarding the child's unique learning needs. A daily chart of the child's academic performance and a record of self-management skills may be maintained. The list goes on of tests and inventories, rating scales and checklists, and charts and records concerning each child with exceptionalities.

The problem with such information collection is the natural conflict between the individual's right to privacy and society's need for information concerning individual behavior (Stevens, 1980). To protect the privacy of students and their families while at the same time ensuring access to information by those with a legitimate interest in a child's education, Congress enacted the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) in 1974. Additional safeguards were provided for children with disabilities through EHA.

This article examines issues in the disclosure of student records—the release of information regarding a child or permitting access to the child's educational records—and invasion of privacy.

WHAT INFORMATION MUST TEACHERS DISCLOSE?

Teachers are required to report known and suspected incidents of child abuse and neglect. Federal assistance for child abuse programs requires that each state enact a child abuse and reporting statute (Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1974, 45 CFR 1340.1). Educators in all 50 states and the District of Columbia are now required to report child abuse (Meddin & Rosen, 1986), and 45 states impose criminal penalties for failure to report abuse and neglect (cited in State v. Grover, 1989).

The principal of a Minnesota elementary school was charged with two counts of failing to report suspected child abuse following two alleged incidents of sexual misconduct by a teacher (State v. Grover, 1989). The mothers of two boys informed the principal that a teacher had made sexual advances toward their sons, but the principal failed to notify police. During the investigation police discovered that the principal had also failed to report two other incidents of alleged child abuse involving the same teacher. During the trial, the principal argued that the statute requiring educators to report known and suspected instances of child abuse was unconstitutionally vague and overbroad. The Minnesota Supreme Court found otherwise. The Court held that the statute does not require the espousal of an ideological point of view, but only mandates the reporting of information. An individual making such a report would be free to indicate that while there is reason to suspect abuse, he or she does not hold a personal belief to that effect. Thus whether the principal believed them to be true or not, he was required to report the incidents.

Teachers in most states are also required to report to law enforcement officials any information communicated to them by a student that may bear on the commission of a felony. For example, if a student confides to a teacher information about violations of drug laws, that information must be reported (Overcast & Sales, 1982).
WHAT INFORMATION MUST BE SAFEGUARDED?

Teachers must safeguard educational records. An educational record is any form of information directly related to a child that is collected, maintained, or used by the school (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.3). An educational record may include the results of a child’s psychological evaluation or the IEP. It may also include a videotape of the class taken by the teacher or an audiotape made by the teacher of a child’s oral reading performance. For students under the age of 18, psychiatric hospital treatment plans may be considered educational records (Bellamy to Woodson, 1989). Any form of information collected, maintained, or used by the school that relates to a child is considered an educational record and must be safeguarded.

Records that a school district collects or uses but does not originate must also be considered an educational record under FERPA and EHA. For example, if a school were to receive a medical evaluation regarding a child and that report were placed in the child’s file, the medical report would be considered an educational record (Tyrrell to Janda, 1980).

Reports from juvenile court or social service agencies that the school maintains in its files are also considered educational records. Use, not origination, defines an educational record under FERPA and EHA.

WHO HAS ACCESS TO CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION?

Parents must be permitted to inspect any and all confidential information related to their child (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.10[a]; EHA, 1975, 300.562[a]). Such inspection must be afforded without unnecessary delay and before any meeting regarding an IEP or hearing relating to the identification, evaluation, or placement of the child. In no case may access be delayed more than 45 days.

The parents may also request explanations and interpretations of their child’s records from school officials. Furthermore, parents may have a representative such as an attorney inspect the records (EHA, 1975, 34 CFR 300.562[b]).

The school district is required to provide the parents with access to, but not necessarily copies of their child’s educational records. If, however, a parent were unable to go to the school to inspect the records because of illness or injury, school officials would be required to provide copies of the records. A fee may be charged for copies unless it would effectively prevent parents from exercising their right to inspect the records. However, the school district may not charge an administrative fee for searching for and retrieving educational records (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.11).

Access to educational records must be afforded to custodial and noncustodial parents alike. When Robert Fay, a noncustodial parent, tried to obtain information regarding his children’s school activities and educational progress, the superintendent wrote that the school system would "provide information to any person or organization whom the courts decide have a legal right to it" (Fay v. South Colonie Central School District, 1986, p. 24). Fay then sued the school district in federal court, alleging that he had been denied access to his children’s educational records. The court found the school district liable under the Civil Rights Act of 1871 for denying Fay his statutory right under FERPA to inspect school records. The judgment, along with compensatory damages, was upheld by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals.

Students who are 18 years old or older or who are enrolled in a postsecondary educational institution, exclusive of their parents, have the right to inspect their own educational records. Parents, however, retain the right to inspect records if the student is claimed as a dependent for income tax purposes (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.31[a][8]).

School officials, including teachers and administrators who have a legitimate educational interest, may access educational records (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.31[a][1]). The names of children with disabilities may also be disclosed to school board members if the district’s policies define the board members as school officials with a legitimate educational interest (Tyrrell to Grossman, 1980).

Records may also be disclosed to officials of another school system or agency in which the child intends to enroll (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.31[a][2]). If the parent has notified the school district that the child will be transferring to another school, the child’s educational records may be sent to the new school. Upon request, written notice and copies of the records must also be sent to the parent (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.34[a][2]).
written consent of the parent, copies of a child's educational records may be sent to a physician. Likewise, personal information concerning a child may be discussed with a private psychologist provided that the school district has obtained prior written consent from the parent. Teachers and administrators with access to educational records may disclose information to third parties only after written consent of the parent has been obtained.

WHAT RECORD OF ACCESS MUST BE MAINTAINED?

EHA and FERPA both require that the school district maintain a record of each disclosure of personally identifiable information or request for disclosure (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.3). The record of access must include the name of the person seeking information, the date access was given, and the purpose for which access was given. The record of access requirement does not apply to school officials, parents, students over the age of 18 or enrolled in postsecondary educational institutions, or individuals with written consent from the parent. Requests for "directory information"—information that would not generally be considered harmful or an invasion of privacy if disclosed to the public—need not be recorded.

WHAT INFORMATION MAY TEACHERS DISCLOSE?

Teachers may disclose directory information (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.3). For example, disclosure of a child's name, address, telephone number, or date and place of birth is usually considered harmless. However, disclosure of other information that would ordinarily be considered harmless may be harmful to a child with disabilities. Disclosure of the name of the child's previous school, for example, may be considered harmless enough, but disclosure that the child had previously attended a special school for children with severe emotional disturbances is an invasion of privacy of a greater magnitude.

The school district must notify parents of the information that has been designated directory information and thus subject to public disclosure. Parents may, in turn, notify the school of any or all information that should not be released without their consent (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.3). Thus, prior to disclosing even directory information, the teacher should check to verify that a child's parent has not requested that it be withheld.

WHAT INFORMATION IS NOT SUBJECT TO DISCLOSURE?

Not subject to disclosure are personal notes made by a teacher, kept in his or her sole possession, and revealed to no one except a temporary substitute teacher (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 99.3). For example, if a teacher kept a written record in a notebook of a child's behavioral outbursts and showed it to no one, the notebook would not be subject to disclosure. However, if the teacher shared the notebook with anyone other than a substitute teacher, the notebook would be considered an educational record.

A 4th-grade teacher in Massachusetts wrote a college term paper describing a child with disabilities in her classroom (Alinovi v. Worcester School Committee, 1985). The paper referred to the child by his first name only and identified no other person or place. Before the start of a reevaluation conference for the child, the teacher gave the term paper to the school district special education supervisor and told him that it might provide additional understanding of the child's special needs. The supervisor placed the paper in his briefcase but did not read it, and returned the paper to the teacher after the meeting. When the building principal asked to see the term paper, the teacher refused, claiming that the paper was private. The U.S. Court of Appeals held, however, that by taking the term paper to the reevaluation conference, the teacher had forfeited her expectation of privacy.

Private notes are just that: notes. Once they become the basis for a special education decision or intervention, they may no longer be considered private notes (FERPA, 1974, 34 CFR 300.562). Mary K. has a doctorate in counseling psychology and is qualified to administer and interpret the Rorschach Inkblot Test. When her daughter was administered the Rorschach along with other instruments by a school psychologist, Mary and her husband, John K., requested access to the verbatim Rorschach responses in order to better evaluate the school psychologist's recommendations and to possibly obtain a second opinion. The Circuit Court's ruling against the parents was overturned by the Illinois Court of Appeals (John K. v. Board of Education for School District 65, Cook County, 1987). The Court ruled that raw psychological test data are a part of a student's record and are subject to disclosure under Illinois law. The judge stated, "We cannot consider the verbatim transcript of [the child's] responses as [the psychologist's] 'speculations, reminders, hunches, or impressions' (p. 803).

INVASION OF PRIVACY

Justice Brandeis wrote, "The makers of our constitution...conferred, as against the Government, the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men" (Olmstead v. U.S., 1928, p.
In the creation of voluminous educational records for children placed in special education, school personnel observe the children, interview them, test them, and intervene with them; they are hardly "let alone." While the rights of minors are protected by the Constitution, states still retain the power to restrict the rights of children (Fleming & Fleming, 1987). The rights of children must be balanced against specific governmental interests in the educational setting that may not be present in society at large (Stevens, 1980). Students' rights to privacy may need to be violated in the form of search and seizure when there is a reasonable suspicion of illegal behavior (Avery & Simpson, 1987); reporting suspected child abuse (Meddin & Rosen, 1986); and creating, maintaining, and releasing educational records. However, to avoid infringing on the privacy rights of students, teachers should take the advice of Eades (1986) and make certain that the reports they write, the statements they make, and the records they create are only as required and permitted by their employment in the school.

PROTECTING THE PRIVACY OF STUDENT EDUCATION RECORDS

Student education records are official and confidential documents protected by one of the nation's strongest privacy protection laws, the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA). FERPA, also known as the Buckley Amendment, defines education records as all records that schools or education agencies maintain about students.

FERPA gives parents (as well as students in postsecondary schools) the right to review and confirm the accuracy of education records. This and other United States "privacy" laws ensure that information about citizens collected by schools and government agencies can be released only for specific and legally defined purposes. Since enacting FERPA in 1974, Congress has strengthened privacy safeguards of education records through this law, refining and clarifying family rights and agency responsibilities to protect those rights.

FERPA's legal statute citation can be found in the U.S. Code (20 USC 1232g), which incorporates all amendments to FERPA. FERPA regulations are found in the Federal Register (34 CFR Part 99). FERPA's 1994 amendments are found in Public Law (PL) 103-382.

FERPA Protects Privacy

FERPA applies to public schools and state or local education agencies that receive Federal education funds, and it protects both paper and computerized records. In addition to the Federal laws that restrict disclosure of information from student records, most states also have privacy protection laws that reinforce FERPA. State laws can supplement FERPA, but compliance with FERPA is necessary if schools are to continue to be eligible to receive Federal education funds.

FERPA requires schools and local education agencies to have written and accessible policies about how they restrict the release of student records. The policies must explain parents' rights under FERPA, define what qualifies as "directory information" (personal information that can be made public), set procedures for reviewing and correcting records, and explain how and when student information can be disclosed. When students reach the age of 18, or when they become students at postsecondary education institutions, rights under FERPA transfer from the parents to the students.

FERPA gives both parents, custodial and noncustodial, equal access to student information unless the school has evidence of a court order or state law revoking these rights.

FERPA Defines an Education Record

Education records include a range of information about a student that is collected in schools, such as:

- Date and place of birth, parent(s) and/or guardian addresses, and where parents can be contacted in emergencies;
- Grades, test scores, courses taken, academic specializations and activities, and official letters regarding a student's status in school;
- Special education records;

This document was prepared by Policy Studies Associates, Inc. under contract to the Council of Chief State School Officers. The document was printed by the National Center for Education Statistics for the National Forum on Education Statistics. The Forum represents the education agencies of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and 5 outlying areas as well professional associations and federal agencies that are users or providers of education data. The views expressed here do not necessarily reflect the policy of the U.S. Department of Education and no official endorsement by the Department of Education should be inferred.

February 1996
• Disciplinary records;
• Medical and health records that the school creates or collects and maintains;
• Documentation of attendance, schools attended, courses taken, awards conferred, and degrees earned;
• Personal information such as a student's identification code, social security number, picture, or other information that would make it easy to identify or locate a student.

Personal notes made by teachers and other school officials that are not shared with others are not considered education records. Additionally, law enforcement records created and maintained by a school or district's law enforcement unit are not education records.

Part of the education record, known as directory information, includes personal information about a student that can be made public according to a school system's FERPA policy. Directory information may include a student's name, address, and telephone number, and other information typically found in school yearbooks or athletic programs. Other examples are names and pictures of participants in various extracurricular activities or recipients of awards, pictures of students, and height and weight of athletes.

Each year schools must give parents public notice of the types of information designated as directory information. By a specified time after parents are notified of their review rights, parents may ask to remove all or part of the information on their child that they do not wish to be available to the public without their consent.

FERPA Guarantees Parent Review and Appeal

If, upon review, parents find an education record is inaccurate or misleading, they may request changes or corrections, and schools and education agencies must respond promptly to these requests.

Requests should be made in writing according to local policies. Within a reasonable time period, the school or agency must decide if the request to change the record is consistent with its own assessment of the accuracy of the record. If a parent's request is denied, he or she must be offered the opportunity for a hearing. If parents' disagreement with the record continues after the hearing, they may insert an explanation of their objection in the record.

FERPA's provisions do not apply to grades and educational decisions about children that school personnel make.

While parents have a right to review records, schools are not required by Federal law to provide copies of information, unless providing copies would be the only way of giving parents access. Schools may charge a reasonable fee for obtaining records, and they may not destroy records if a request for access is pending.

FERPA Restricts Disclosure of Student Records

Local education agencies and schools may release information from students' education records with the prior written consent of parents, under limited conditions specified by law, and as stated in local agencies' student records policies. The same rules restricting disclosures apply to records maintained by third parties acting on behalf of schools, such as state and local education agencies, intermediate administrative units, researchers, psychologists, or medical practitioners who work for or are under contract to schools.

A school district is required, however, to have a policy that specifies the categories of officials and parties to whom records may be released without parent consent. The policy should be readily accessible to parents for review.

Teachers and school officials who work with the students and schools to which students apply for entrance may also have access to education records without parent consent. In addition, information from students' records may be released to State and local education officials to conduct audits or to review records in compliance with Federal laws. Schools may also disclose information from education records without the consent of parents in response to subpoenas or court orders. A school official must make a reasonable effort to notify the parent before complying with the subpoena unless the subpoena is issued to enforce a law and specifies not to notify the parent.

In emergencies, school officials can provide information from education records to protect the health or safety of the student or others.

There are cases when schools or school systems decide it is in the public interest to participate in policy evaluations or research studies. If student records are to be released for these purposes, the school or school system must obtain prior parent consent. Signed and dated written consent must:

- Specify the records that will be released;
- State the reason for releasing the records;
- Identify the groups or individuals who will receive the records.

In general, information about each request for records access and each disclosure of information from an education record must be maintained as part of the record until the school or agency destroys the education record. Outside parties receiving records must receive a written explanation of the restrictions on the re-release of information.

Additional FERPA Provisions

In 1994, the Improving America’s Schools Act amended several components of FERPA, tightening privacy assurances for students and families. The amendments apply to the following key areas:

- Parents have the right to review the education records of their children maintained by state education agencies;
- Any agency or institution that inappropriately re-releases personally identifiable information from an education record cannot have access to education records for five years;
- Information about disciplinary actions taken against students may be shared, without parents’ consent, with officials in other education institutions;
- Schools may release records in compliance with certain law enforcement judicial orders and subpoenas without notifying parents.

This section focuses on special education records and basic issues teachers should understand.

SPECIAL EDUCATION RECORDS

One of the most frequent complaints of special education staff is the amount of paperwork requirements for maintaining student records. This is a valid concern and deserves guidance for special educators to help reduce unnecessary paperwork and provide techniques that would decrease time on paperwork resulting in increased time to provide direct services for students with disabilities.

Confidentiality requirements need to be understood and followed by school staff maintaining special education records. Sharing information with unauthorized individuals can lead to liability issues for the school and can violate the student’s civil rights.

In many cases, special education files contain more than the required documentation to meet minimal compliance standards. The importance of proper documentation cannot be overstated; however, too much paperwork can be confusing and hide the essential documents such as the current IEP, which used to provide an appropriate educational program.

The purpose for this section is to clarify issues of record keeping and confidentiality as it pertains to students in special education programs.

STAFF TRAINING

The school should provide information and training to all school staff regarding the importance of confidentiality and proper maintenance of special education records each school year. This could include the following:

- Special education teachers
- General education teachers
- Related service providers
- Paraeducators
- Bus drivers
- Secretaries
- Administrators
- Volunteers

CONTENT OF SPECIAL EDUCATION FILES

Since many students are in special education programs for numerous school years, the special education file tends to become very bulky. A school can decide what record keeping system is best to fulfill their particular needs; however, the following suggested system seems to provide an efficient method to manage student records.
The recommendation is to create a two tier process for maintaining special education student records. The primary file is kept with the main service provider or case manager and contains the essential compliance documents and current IEP.

Contents of Primary File

- Access log
- Building level support team – intervention documentation (pre referral)
- Referral form
- Initial consent to evaluate/consent for reevaluation
- Multidisciplinary team report (eligibility determination)
- Current behavior management/discipline plans – ED/BD
- Initial permission for placement
- Current written notices and meeting notices

The primary file contains a limited amount of information and is bound in chronological order. At the end of the school year, outdated information such as the old IEP and written notices are sent to the special education director’s office to be filed in the secondary file.

Contents of Secondary File

- Parent correspondence
- Written and meeting notices over one year old
- Outdated IEPs
- Test protocols
- Annual review minutes
- Student work samples
- Written correspondence
- Discipline notices
- Three year evaluation documentation

Acceptance of Special Education Records

Schools receive students in special education who transfer at various times during the school year. It is never advisable to serve a student until the special education records have been obtained and reviewed by the reviewing special education staff. If the team disagrees with the findings and conclusions of the sending school, they can always order, with parent notification, additional evaluations to validate past findings or provide reasons to proceed in a different direction.
CASE MANAGER/RECORD LOCATOR

It is best to assign a case manager to each student eligible for special education services. This individual would take the responsibility of storing and maintaining the student record. The case manager is usually the special education staff member who is the primary service provider. A record locator should be included in cumulative files and other student records listing a phone number, fax number and/or E-mail address that can be used by the receiving school to determine if additional records exist on the student.

RECORD DESTRUCTION

FERPA Guidance on Record Retention or Destruction

EDGAR Reg. 75.734 requires States receiving Federal education funds and their sub grantees to keep, for five years, records showing the amount of funds they received under a grant or sub grant, how they were used, and other records to facilitate an effective audit, as well as records demonstrating compliance with program requirements. IEPs and evaluation team reports are examples of documents that may be necessary to demonstrate compliance with IDEA-B requirements.

A school district must destroy personally identifiable information at the parent’s request when that information is no longer needed to provide educational services. This can be accomplished by removing personal identifiers from retained records. When records are no longer needed for educational purposes, a school may separate them from active files and retain them in a special file with limited access.

Although largely complementary, IDEA regulations on student records in some respects go beyond the requirements of FERPA. For example, Reg. 300.573 requires that parents be informed when a school proposes to destroy student records. Parents must be informed of their right to request destruction of information whenever their child graduates or leaves school, and with certain exceptions, this information must be destroyed at the parent’s request. The district may establish specific times, such as IEP meetings, school registration, or program completion, to inform parents that personally identifiable information is no longer required and will be destroyed.

A school, however, may retain a permanent record of a student’s name, address, phone number, grades, attendance record, classes attended, grade level completed, and year completed, even over parental objections. For special education students, the due process procedures should be invoked if a school resists a parental request for destruction on the grounds that records are needed to provide educational services. By contrast, when the parent challenges material in records as misleading or inaccurate, the proper response under FERPA is amendment of the records.
Each school should keep a record of persons obtaining access to special education records. The record will include the name of the person, date of access, and the purpose for which the person is authorized to use the records. Access and use of student records will follow guidelines outlined by the Family Education Records Privacy Act.

SUBPART B--WHAT ARE THE RIGHTS OF INSPECTION AND REVIEW OF EDUCATION RECORDS?

Sec. 99.10 What rights exist for a parent or eligible student to inspect and review education records?
(a) Except as limited under Sec. 99.12, each educational agency or institution shall permit a parent or eligible student to inspect and review the education records of the student.

(b) The educational agency or institution shall comply with a request for access to records within a reasonable period of time, but in no case more than 45 days after it has received the request.

(c) The educational agency or institution shall respond to reasonable requests for explanations and interpretations of the records.
