The contemporary women's movement, communicating largely through the written word, mistakenly ignored or failed to notice the following: (1) almost one quarter of American women (23%) had severely limited literacy skills; (2) for female heads of households, 75% of those with less than a high school diploma lived in poverty; (3) nearly 40% of female single parents had an eighth-grade education; and (4) almost 35% of displaced homemakers had an eighth-grade education. Literacy was equated with personal power and opportunity, something denied to those with low literacy skills. The majority of feminist writings is largely theoretical and too scholarly for adult basic education students. Organizations such as Women Leading Through Reading pioneered a more politicized approach to feminist adult education by sponsoring groups for adult women working to improve their literacy skills. (About two thirds of the document is an annotated bibliography, directed at learning center coordinators and adult educators, that aims to provide a listing of feminist resources and reading materials for women with low literacy. It describes 24 books and curriculum materials published by feminist, university, and independent presses. Seven other resources, including non-profit foundations and focus groups in the United States and Canada, are listed). (AJ)
Feminism and Literacy for Women: Politics and Resources

Mev Miller
Feminism and Literacy for Women: Politics and Resources

by Mev Miller

In many ways, the contemporary women's movement (1960s to present) has been a movement that communicates through written word. Access to the words and ideas of women has been viewed as one of the ways women's lives could be enriched, changed, and improved. In the early years of this movement - when women's words were largely not accessible through mainstream sources - our desire for them resulted in the creation of feminist publishers of books, magazines, newspapers, and development of bookstores, libraries, and resource centers. In this way, the feminist movement has assumed the ability to read - made an assumption of literacy.

Though feminists claim a movement for all women, we have forgotten or failed to notice that in the United States, an estimated twenty-three percent of all adult females have severely limited literacy skills, compared to seventeen percent of males. For female heads of households, seventy-five percent of those with less than a high school diploma live in poverty, compared to thirty-four percent of men in the same situation. Nearly forty percent of female single parents and thirty-five percent of displaced home-makers have an eighth-grade education or less.1 Literacy brings with it both opportunity and personal enrichment - possibility and power. All women should be able to access the writings of women on the wide range of issues and topics concerning us - including women who struggle with reading. All women, regardless of reading skill, should be able to access the writings that bring to voice and visibility the life experiences of those who have traditionally been silenced and hidden.

It is my opinion that as feminist writings have moved from the places of activism to the places of academia, feminism in written format has become not only more prevalent but also more difficult to understand - even obtuse. This not only makes feminist theory inaccessible to those women with limited reading skills, but perhaps even irrelevant. As feminist perpetuators of emphasis on written materials - in our work as educators, librarians, activists, publishers, booksellers - we need to become more mindful of and active in addressing the issues of literacy for women.

When I first became active with Women Leading Through Reading (an initiative that sponsors book discussion groups for adult women working to improve their literacy skills), I began to notice how few women-centered or feminist resources are actually available for women with limited reading skills. As I have talked with learning center coordinators and adult educators, I've learned these materials are scarce but also desired. So, I've begun to research and compile a resource listing of such materials. I encourage readers to send me information about materials with which they are familiar (mev@winternet.com). I'd be very interested in the viewpoints and experiences of the readers of this article - especially about what materials you may have found useful. The remainder of this article offers a brief survey of a few of the materials I have found to date.

Two feminist presses - Firebrand and Seal - have published a couple books each that are accessible to or specifically designed for women with limited reading skills. From Firebrand Books,2 Movement in Black by Pat Parker is now available in an expanded edition with an introduction by Cheryl Clarke. It offers straightforward poetry by a Black lesbian poet and activist. Simple Songs, stories by Vicki Sears, is a collection of short stories which reflect the Native American song traditions and "sings" the ordinary lives of Native children, women, and the Old Ones.

Seal Press3 offers two books of biography and history in the "Women Who Dared" Series about women who have affected political and social change in their countries and communities. Getting the Real Story: Nellie Bly and Ida B. Wells by Sue Davidson profiles two women who made their mark in the world of journalism at the turn of the century, while A Heart in Politics: Jeannette Rankin and Patsy Mink by Sue Davidson profiles two outstanding women politicians. Seal Press has also published several books on issues of domestic violence, including You Can Be Free: An Easy to Read Handbook for Abused Women by Ginny NiCarthy and Sue Davidson.

The University Press of Kentucky produces a series called New Books for New Readers. Though not specifically women-centered in focus, one of the titles is quite moving and fits well in this context. Heartwood by Nikkey Finney is a touching novel in which two young women, Trina Sims and Jenny Bryan, discover how much they are alike inside despite their different skin colors. Women Who Made a Difference by Carol Crowe-Carraco includes short biographies of some of Kentucky's heroines - Jenny Wiley, Lucy Audubon, Mary Breckinridge, and Loretta Lynn among others.

The Writers' Voices Series from Signal Hill Publications - a division of New Readers Press4 and Laubach Literacy International - provides selections from the work of well-known writers, compiled with a short biography of the author, an essay that places the work in historical context, and other supportive materials. Some of the writers are those recognized as... strong women - even feminist - writers. They include: Selected from "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings" and "The Heart of a Woman" by Maya Angelou; Selected from "The Joy Luck Club" by Amy Tan; Selected from "Love Medicine" by Louise Erdrich; Selected from "The Temple of My Familiar" by Alice Walker; and Selected from "The Women of Brewster Place" by Gloria Naylor.

New Readers Press offers several other materials, including two health books in their series "A Quick and Easy Guide." Women's Health covers such issues as doctor visits, addiction issues, sexual health (including lesbian concerns), aging, violence, and other topics; Having a Baby includes not only the specific health concerns of childbirth but touches on the related issues of family changes, work and money concerns, and immediate concerns of the babies' health just after birth.

WomenVenture,5 a local organization here in St. Paul that helps women find jobs, plan careers, and start and grow businesses, has produced an easier-to-read book for women with little or no previous job experience. Women Winning in the Workplace: How to Succeed in Your Job includes practical information on the types of situations a woman would encounter in the workplace and provides an opportunity for the reader to explore alternative decision-making skills about these situations.

In addition to these easier-to-read materials, there exist a few important curriculum materials. Making Connections: Literacy and EAL Curriculum from a Feminist Perspective, produced by Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women (CCLOW),6 is a wonderful resource tool for educators looking for literacy materials from a feminist perspective. It includes suggestions for activities, writings by women learners, writing exercises, resource lists, sample stories, and more collected in a handsome spiral-bound format. Additionally, there are articles on how to use the materials as well as discussion on what constitutes a feminist curriculum. The chapters organize the materials by subject - gender roles, cultural awareness, role models, work, self-esteem, safer sex, and so on. Doing the Gender Boogie: Power, Participation & Economic Justice - A Popular Education and Action Guide by Debbie Culbertson offers strategies for understanding economic development for women. Though specific to a Canadian context, this work incorporates many international perspectives, including a discussion on trafficking in women (available from Ten Days for World Development?).

Several titles exist for those who would like to educate themselves or who want more in-depth understanding of women and literacy issues. Something in My Mind Besides the Everyday: Women and Literacy by Jennifer Horsman (from The Women's Press)8) raises important issues for those of us concerned with how illiteracy affects women. It emphasizes the barriers to literacy for women, describes the ways in which women long for literacy, addresses some of the social perceptions of literacy, and outlines difficult philosophical questions. What is the definition of literacy? Is it enough to be functionally literate? How does literacy (or lack of it) reflect political and societal realities? Does literacy necessarily guarantee a higher quality of life for women? What motivates women? And what are the cold realities of the labor market and where does this intersect with levels of acquired literacy?

Two other important collections also come from Canada. Canadian Women's Studies' "Special Issue on Women and Literacy" includes some general articles on the politics of literacy as well as stories about the experiences of individual women. There are stories of several learning centers - both in Canada and overseas - how they are structured and what they hope to accomplish. There's also an article about a literacy program based in a library. Other articles address issues for special populations such as immigrant women, teen parents, and women with disabilities. The Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women has also published Listen to Women in Literacy: The Power of Woman-Positive Literacy Work by Tannis Atkinson with Frances Ennis and Betty-Ann Lloyd. It portrays the work of twelve adult literacy programs across Canada that initiated programs specifically for women. In accessible language, it describes the various strategies used by the programs and outlines what they learned about women's lives. It also directly talks about how programs can be women-positive and what role feminism plays in literacy work with women.

For more U.S.-based information on women and literacy deriving directly from women's experiences, there are two recommendations. Until We Are Strong Together: Women Writers in the Tenderloin by Caroline Heller witnesses the power of literacy in the lives of the members of the Tenderloin Women Writers Workshop, who gathered weekly in one of San Francisco's roughest neighborhoods, to share their writing and life experiences. By Women/For Women: A Beginning Dialogue on Women and Literacy in the United States, a booklet prepared by Laubach Literacy Action, reports information acquired by focus groups with adult women learners. The report outlines some of the critical barriers to women struggling to achieve literacy and provides important recommendations on how to address these issues. Finally, there are two recent novels that realistically fictionalize the problems faced by women with limited educational experience and literacy skills. Push: A Novel by Sapphire portrays Precious Jones, a sixteen-year-old woman passed through school until her suspension for being pregnant. The novel focuses on how Precious has been schooled without achieving literacy, and the changes that assist her in becoming educated and self-sufficient. Working Parts: A Novel (Lambda Literary Award Finalist and ALA/GLBT Book Award) by Lucy Jane Bledsoe focuses on Lori Taylor, a les-bian bicycle mechanic who cannot read. Here, too, we come to understand how adults cope with and hide their inability to read while being witty and successful. In this novel, Lori faces her secret shame and, after several failed attempts, finally works to improve her reading skills. Both of these novels can be successfully used with adults with limited reading skills.

For additional suggestions in all of these areas, please visit the resource page on the Women Leading Through Reading website (www.litwomen.org/wltr.html).

NOTES

4. New Readers Press, P.O. Box 131, Syracuse, NY 13210-0131.

6. Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women, 47 Main St., Toronto, Ont., Canada M4E 2V6, 416-699-1909; fax: 416-699-2145; email: cclow@web.apc.org

[Mev Miller has been active as a feminist in the book industry for more than fifteen years. She is a book buyer for Amazon Bookstore in Minneapolis, Project Coordinator for the Women's Presses Library Project, and co-founder of Women Leading Through Reading, a literacy initiative for women in the Twin Cities. Currently, Mev is also a candi-date for an Ed.D. in Critical Pedagogy, focusing on issues of women's literacy, at the University of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Min-nesota. For the academic year of 1999-2000, Mev has received a graduate student research grant to further study the availability of femi-nist and women-centered literacy materials. Please send your suggestions to mev@ winternet.com]

Titles mentioned:

Canadian Woman Studies v.9, nos.3&4, Fall/Winter 1998: "Special Issue on Women and Literacy."

I. DOCUMENT IDENTIFICATION:

Title: Feminism and Literacy for Women: Politics and Resources

Author(s): Mel Miller

Corporate Source: Feminist Collections: A Quarterly of Women's Studies Resources v. 21, no. 1 (Fall, 1999): 17-20

Publication Date: Fall 1999

II. REPRODUCTION RELEASE:

In order to disseminate as widely as possible timely and significant materials of interest to the educational community, documents announced in the monthly abstract journal of the ERIC system, Resources in Education (RIE), are usually made available to users in microfiche, reproduced paper copy, and electronic media, and sold through the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS). Credit is given to the source of each document, and, if reproduction release is granted, one of the following notices is affixed to the document.

If permission is granted to reproduce and disseminate the identified document, please CHECK ONE of the following three options and sign at the bottom of the page.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 1 documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Sample

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 1

Check here for Level 1 release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche or other ERIC archival media (e.g., electronic) and paper copy.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 2A documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL IN MICROFICHE, AND IN ELECTRONIC MEDIA FOR ERIC COLLECTION SUBSCRIBERS ONLY, HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Sample

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 2A

Check here for Level 2A release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche and in electronic media for ERIC archival collection subscribers only.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 2B documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL IN MICROFICHE ONLY HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Sample

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 2B

Check here for Level 2B release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche only.

Documents will be processed as indicated provided reproduction quality permits. If permission to reproduce is granted, but no box is checked, documents will be processed at Level 1.

I hereby grant to the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) nonexclusive permission to reproduce and disseminate this document as indicated above. Reproduction from the ERIC microfiche or electronic media by persons other than ERIC employees and its system contractors requires permission from the copyright holder. Exception is made for non-profit reproduction by libraries and other service agencies to satisfy information needs of educators in response to discrete inquiries.

Signature: Phyllis Holmcrn Weisbarth, Women's Studies Librarian

Organization/Address: University of Wisconsin System Women's Studies Library, 430 Memorial Union, 125 South Street

Telephone: 608-262-5754 FAX: 608-262-2754

E-mail Address: wisu11@library.wisc.edu Date: 11/24/2002

Madison, WI 53706
If permission to reproduce is not granted to ERIC, or, if you wish ERIC to cite the availability of the document from another source, please provide the following information regarding the availability of the document. (ERIC will not announce a document unless it is publicly available, and a dependable source can be specified. Contributors should also be aware that ERIC selection criteria are significantly more stringent for documents that cannot be made available through EDRS.)

Publisher/Distributor:

Address:

Price:

IV. REFERRAL OF ERIC TO COPYRIGHT/REPRODUCTION RIGHTS HOLDER:

If the right to grant this reproduction release is held by someone other than the addressee, please provide the appropriate name and address:

Name:

Address:

V. WHERE TO SEND THIS FORM:

Send this form to the following ERIC Clearinghouse:

Cheryl Grossman
Processing Coordinator
ERIC Clearinghouse on Adult, Career, and Vocational Education
Center on Education and Training for Employment
1900 Kenny Road
Columbus, OH 43210-1090

However, if solicited by the ERIC Facility, or if making an unsolicited contribution to ERIC, return this form (and the document being contributed) to:

ERIC Processing and Reference Facility
4483-A Forbes Boulevard
Lanham, Maryland 20706

Telephone: 301-552-4200
Toll Free: 800-799-3742
FAX: 301-552-4700
E-mail: info@ericfac.piccard.csc.com
WWW: http://ericfacility.org