This paper presents information about World Wide Web resources for English language teachers and students and for communication scholars and researchers. The first Web page, "Reference Materials for Students and Researchers," offers links to resources in English. Because there are many Web sites related to dictionaries, a second page, "Reference Materials (Dictionaries)," has dictionary-related links. It includes dictionaries, almanacs, encyclopedias, and thesauruses. The third Web page, "Jisho-Jiten (Dictionaries)," links Web pages written in Japanese. Some of the Japanese pages also have English and some have resources which are mainly for Japanese speakers versus English speakers. An appendix, which comprises the bulk of this paper, presents reference materials for students and researchers (including all English links available in the three Web pages discussed in this paper). The 11 topics are: reference materials, writing, writing for English-as-a-Second-Language students, editing and proofreading services, writing lessons, style sheet, search engines, search sites, libraries, museums, and mass media. Reference Materials on the World Wide Web

Reference Materials on the World Wide Web

Kenji Kitao

Introduction

The Internet has vast resources, and one of its great advantages is that it has information on almost any imaginable subject. However, the size of the Internet is also a disadvantage. Because the Internet is so large and has no central organization, finding precisely the information you want can be very difficult.

I have published information about World Wide Web resources for ELT for English language teachers and students, and resources for communication for communication scholars and researchers (Kitao, 1997; Kitao, 2001).

I have also made links pages for reference materials, including dictionaries, for researchers, scholars and students. In this paper, I will explain the background of the development of this resource, what it covers, what it can be used for, and how to use it effectively.

Web Pages Linking Reference Resources

I have three main pages which have links to web pages with useful resources related to reference materials. One has links to resources in English. There are a great many web sites related to dictionaries, so a second, separate page has dictionary-related links. The third web page links

Doshisha Society for the Study of Language and Culture,
© Kenji Kitao
web pages written in Japanese. Some of the Japanese pages also have English and some resources which are mainly for Japanese speakers rather than English speakers. These links are kept separate mainly because they require a browser which can process Japanese characters.

Since the latter page has information in both Japanese and English, it might have useful information even for users who do not read Japanese, if they have a browser that can handle Japanese characters. If not, they can use “Shodouka (http://web.shodouka.com/) to read web pages with Japanese characters.

The web page with resources in English is called "Reference Materials for Students and Researchers" (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/referenc.htm). I have divided a large number of links into categories and subcategories and included descriptions for many of them. In addition, I have made "Reference Materials (Dictionaries)" (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/dictionary.htm). It includes not only dictionaries, but also almanacs, encyclopedias, and thesauruses. However, I have combined them in this publication since they are related and were originally all part of one web page.

The symbol  before comments or descriptions indicates that the description is written by me or by S. Kathleen Kitao, who assisted me in developing these pages. Descriptions without  come from the pages themselves. I have used the original titles as they appear on the web pages as much as possible.

The Japanese page, “Jisho · Jiten (Dictionaries)” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac. jp/users/kkitao/Japanese/online/dictionary.htm) includes web resources written in Japanese, English-Japanese dictionaries, Japanese-English dictionaries, learner’s dictionaries, dictionaries for children, Japanese language dictionaries and search engines for Japanese web pages, since the main users for those resources are Japanese speakers.
Using “Reference Materials for Students and Researchers” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/referenc.htm)
and “Reference Materials (Dictionaries)” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/dictionary.htm)

In order to conduct research projects and write papers, scholars need reference materials. Students need various types of reference materials, including basic ones such as dictionaries, thesauruses, and encyclopedias. Scholars and postgraduate students may need APA and MLA style sheets for writing research papers.

Nowadays, many reference materials are found on the Internet, and I have compiled a list of links to many of them in “Reference Materials for Students and Researchers” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/referenc.htm). On-line resources are particularly useful, because you can search for information, navigate through links, and look up information just by changing screens.

Most students and researchers use dictionaries, almanacs, encyclopedias, thesauruses, and other reference materials frequently. Since there are a huge number of those reference materials on the Internet, I made the separate page “Reference Materials (Dictionaries)” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/dictionary.htm).

Grammar and punctuation are also important when writing. Writers may need to check on the correct style, expression, usage, etc. There are web pages with information about these aspects of writing and other useful subjects for writers.

Writing good research papers is very important for researchers and students. If the writing is not good, it is not possible to publish research papers. There are some useful sites on the Internet to help them with resources, lessons, and services. These include sites for non-English speakers.
Web pages for newspapers, magazines, and TV networks can also be useful resources for research, particularly on current events or the mass media. There is a vast number of newspapers, magazines, and TV network web pages from various countries on the Internet.

In addition, I have included links to search-related sites, libraries, and museums. In order to use the resources on the Internet, it is necessary to use search engines, search directories, and search sites efficiently. Researchers still use printed documents mainly for research, and libraries are very important. Some people may also need to use museums for research.

Organization of "Reference Materials for Students and Researchers" and "Reference Materials (Dictionaries)"

These web pages consist of 1) reference materials: almanacs, dictionaries, thesauruses, collections of quotations, encyclopedias, grammar, etc., 2) writing materials, 3) writing materials for non-native speakers of English, 4) editing and proofreading services, 5) writing lessons, 6) style sheets, including ones that have information about citing on-line resources, 7) search engines for searching for materials on the Internet, 8) search sites with information that can be searched or browsed, including ERIC and virtual libraries, 9) libraries throughout the world, including NACSIS WebCat, 10) museums, 11) mass media (news resources), including newspapers, magazines, and TV, and 12) various other resources that might be useful for postgraduate students and English language teachers.

The dictionary page includes reference materials, acronym dictionaries, almanacs, bilingual and multilingual dictionaries, English language dictionaries, encyclopedias, thesauruses, and other kinds of dictionaries. (Other dictionaries such as English-Japanese, Japanese-English, children's, learner's and Japanese language dictionaries are included in the Japanese web resources page, since main users are Japanese language speakers.) This section was greatly expanded in the most recent revision of this web page.
Grammar and punctuation resources and helps are included.

The rest of the sections were updated and some new links were added. Sections 2)-6) are for writing and very useful for studying and checking writing.

Search engines, search directories and search sites including virtual libraries are included in 7) and 8). Many libraries have catalogs on the Internet, and it is possible to search printed documents they have through the Internet. Mass media includes not only printed materials such as newspapers and magazines, but also radio and TV broadcasts.

Using "Reference Materials for Students and Researchers" Effectively

On-line almanacs, dictionaries, encyclopedias, and thesauruses are easy to use and very useful. I have listed links of various lists of links to dictionaries in the first subcategory. You can try various dictionaries and find which ones are most useful for your purposes. If the Oxford English Dictionary (OED) is available on the computer you are using, it is helpful to get used to using it for your writing. There is some help for grammar and punctuation.

English<-->Japanese dictionaries, learner's dictionaries, dictionaries for children and Japanese language dictionaries are not for English-speaking English language teachers and researchers, but for Japanese speakers. They are not included in English web pages, but in Japanese web pages. However, you can use these web resources by clicking on the entry in the table of contents.

Resources for writing are very useful. For those in academia, career advancement requires writing, so it is worthwhile to study good writing using these resources. The resources include publishing-related resources, but if you are interested in publishing something, particularly related to ELT, "Publishing Your Papers Using the Internet" (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/internet/inte-pub.htm) is useful.
Resources are available on line to help non-native speakers of English write English compositions. Writing lessons are even available on line. For a fee, some sites offer services related to editing and writing—some of these sites just offer to make grammatical corrections, while others offer help with style. Some specialize in business writing. Fees vary a great deal as well. It is easy to copy texts or adopt ideas on the Internet. Particularly for non-native speakers of English, inadvertent plagiarism is sometimes a problem. You might find “Plagiarism” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/class/project/Plagiarism.doc) helpful in understanding what plagiarism is and how to avoid it, since many people do it without realizing that they are doing it.

Links to various style sheets have been listed. All academic papers conform to APA, MLA or other established styles. The two major ones, APA and MLA, are used internationally. Of course, many academic journals use their own style sheets for their articles, but most individual styles are based on either APA or MLA. APA style, or APA-based styles, are more common for social science, linguistics, and language teaching. It is a good idea to be familiar with this style. The printed APA style manual, which is available in almost all university libraries, is the best resource, but even for writers already familiar with APA style, these on-line resources can be useful because they have formats for citing on-line resources, CD-Roms, computer software, etc., which are non-print materials. More non-print materials will be used in the future, so these on-line style sheets are important.

It is also a good idea to be familiar with the search engines available to look for information on the Internet. Google is a very useful one. It is particularly good at placing the most useful pages at the beginning of the list of sites found. AltaVista is another powerful search engine. For any search engine, it is helpful to look at the help page or tips page to find out the particular characteristics of that search engine. Also, an “advanced "search" can often be used to narrow down the types of pages you will get from your search, for example, by limiting the time period.

If you are looking for information in a certain defined field, a subject directory like Yahoo (http://www.yahoo.com/) might be better. Using Yahoo, you choose an area that you are interested in and narrow it down to find the exact type of information you want.

Search sites are very useful for searching for certain kinds of information. There are ERIC and other searchable sites, including sites that allow you to search journal articles. Searching for information you need quickly is an important skill, and as you practice and use the search sites more, you will learn to do it faster and more effectively.

It was relatively easy to search for information on the Internet five years ago, but now there are hundreds of millions more web pages, and it can be very difficult to find particular information. It might take much time before you find it if you are not familiar with search engines and tips to use them effectively. I have co-authored “Searching for Information on the Internet” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/class/project/searching.htm) for students to teach them how to search efficiently for information on the Internet and “Using AltaVista” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/class/project/AltaVista.htm) to teach students to use that search engine effectively. Since almost anyone can post information on the Internet, it is important to evaluate the information after you find on web pages. I have co-authored “Evaluating Internet Resources” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/class/project/evaluating.htm) to help students learn how to evaluate information they find.

I also have included links to libraries throughout the world. If you are looking for some types of resources, including information about books and journals, libraries are a good place to look. There are many virtual libraries, and they have very useful information which many libraries do not have. If you are looking for commercially published books or journals, I suggest that

More and more museums have web pages, and these often have useful and interesting information. I have compiled a list of homepages of museums.

Newspaper, magazine, and TV news network web pages are often useful sources of information. I have compiled links to their web pages. I have compiled many links to lists of links to newspapers and magazines around the world in the first subcategory. You can also listen to news stories and even see video if you have the necessary software. If you are looking for newspaper articles on specific topics, I suggest that you use Lexis-Nexis (Worldwide Database of Newspapers, Wire Services, and Broadcasting Transcripts), if it is available to you. It is often available in large institutions. If you are interested in it, please see “Lexis-Nexis (Worldwide Database of Newspapers, Wire Services, and Broadcasting transcripts)” (http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/other/nexis.htm) for an explanation of what it is and what is available through it.

At the end of the web page, I have included some interesting resources which might be useful for postgraduate work or teaching English. In addition to these resources, there are many ways to search for resources online or using CD-Rom these days.

Conclusion

I hope the reference materials here will be useful for postgraduate studies, research, study, writing papers, etc., and many of them will be used on a daily basis.
I have made this web page in order to include reference materials which have Japanese characters on the page. There are eleven sections in this resource: 1) links pages for dictionaries and reference materials, 2) multilingual dictionaries, 3) English-Japanese/Japanese-English dictionaries, 4) English-Japanese dictionaries, 5) Japanese-English dictionaries, 6) thesauruses, 7) encyclopedias, 8) children's dictionaries, 9) Japanese language dictionaries, 10) other kinds of dictionaries, and 11) search engines, search directories, and search sites.

Some of these web pages have pages written only in English, and they are separated from the Japanese pages in each section. Thus, they are easy to access from the above web pages. The reason English pages are included in this section is that learner's dictionaries, dictionaries for children and ones including Japanese language are intended mainly for Japanese-speaking people. Thus, they are included in this page.

The search engines, subject directories and search sites listed on the pages are mainly for searching Japanese web resources. If you are particularly looking for English web resources, it is better to use those included on the English links page.

Conclusion

I have described and explained three extensive web page resources which have a vast number of links. I hope that these resources are useful for many teachers, researchers and students who are involved in research.

Notes

This work was funded by Doshisha University's Research Promotion Fund, 2000-2001, and a Grant-in-Aid for Exploratory Research, 1999-2001, from the Japan Society for the Promotion of Science.

This web resource was initiated in 1996 at Lancaster University, and it has been updated several times since then. I completely renewed these web pages in November 2001. I would like to express my deep appreciation to S. Kathleen Kitao, who has helped in creating this resource and in updating it.

Making of America

Making of America (MOA) is a digital library of primary sources in American social history from the antebellum period through reconstruction. The collection is particularly strong in the subject areas of education, psychology, American history, sociology, religion, and science and technology. The collection contains approximately 5,000 books and journal volumes with imprints between 1850 and 1877. The project represents a major collaborative endeavor in preservation and electronic access to historical texts.
