This teaching unit, "Settlement Unit," which focuses on the settlement of Alabama's land, is the second in a series of 10 units about Alabama state history, part of a project designed to help teachers integrate the use of primary source materials into their classrooms. Although the units are designed to augment the study of Alabama, they are useful in the study of U.S. history, world history, and the social studies in general. Each unit contains background information for the teacher and consists of several lessons. Lessons contain learning strategies, suggested activities, and documents. This unit is divided into four sections: (1) "Introduction"; (2) "Lesson 1: From Territory to State" (Alabama Governors; Capitols of Alabama; 12 primary source documents); (3) "Lesson 2: Frontier Justice" (seven primary source documents); and (4) "Lesson 3: Alabama Fever" (one worksheet; one primary source document). Project Description

This project is designed to help teachers more easily integrate the use of primary source materials into their classrooms. It consists of teaching units on Alabama history organized in ten chronological/subject areas:

- Creek War, 1813-1814
- Settlement
- Slavery
- Civil War
- Reconstruction
- 1901 Constitution
- World War I
- Depression/New Deal
- World War II
- Civil Rights Movement

While these units cover some of the most critical and significant periods in Alabama history, the selected lessons are meant to be representative rather than comprehensive. These units were designed to augment the study of Alabama, yet they are useful in the study of the United States, the world, and the social studies in general. The documents can also be used to supplement the study of other curriculums.

Each unit contains background information for the teacher and is made up of several lessons. The lessons contain learning objectives, suggested activities, and documents. Documents are reproduced in the original form and transcribed when necessary. Primary source materials may be printed and reproduced for classroom use. Lessons can be used without modification, adapted for specific class use, or entire new lessons and activities may be created based on the primary source materials provided.

Purpose of the Project

The 1992 Alabama Social Studies Course of Studies emphasized the use of primary source documents to "enrich the social studies program and enable students to visualize and empathize with people of other times and places." These documents help students vividly understand the feelings and actions of Jeremiah Austill at the Canoe Fight of 1813, of riders on the first integrated buses in Montgomery at the conclusion of the famous bus boycott, of women nursing wounded Civil War soldiers, and of destitute Alabama families during the Depression. These documents enrich the study of Alabama history and the study of all civilizations.
The Alabama Department of Archives and History is the official repository for Alabama government documents and holds many of the most important books, documents, visual materials and artifacts that document the history of Alabama and the South. The purpose of this project is to bring those materials to students, and to organize them in such a way that teachers can easily utilize them in the classroom.

Introduction to the Settlement Unit:

The defeat of the Creek Indians opened the heartland of Alabama to white settlement and caused Alabama fever to sweep the nation. Pioneers by the thousands left Tennessee, Georgia, the Carolinas, and Virginia seeking fertile land for growing cotton. Mississippi territorial law was in place, but when Mississippi became a state, Congress created the Alabama Territory in 1817. Congress designated St. Stephens as capital of the Alabama Territory and approved a legislature of Alabama delegates already elected to the old Mississippi territorial legislature. William Wyatt Bibb, a Georgia physician who had served in the United States Congress and had powerful friends in Washington, was named Territorial governor. He was also elected as the first governor when Alabama became a state December 14, 1819. He helped establish the government, pass laws and administer justice. The following documents deal with cost of government, land speculation, cotton, and law as settlers poured in the area during the early settlement of Alabama.
Lesson 1: From Territory to State

1. Background information for teachers:

The Comptroller of Public Accounts, also known as the Auditor of Public Accounts, served as the state's chief financial officer responsible for virtually all revenue and accounting functions. Vouchers were sent to the comptroller requesting payment from the state treasury for goods and services rendered to the state including vouchers issued in 1817 and 1818 when the state was governed as the Alabama Territory. After Alabama became a state in 1819, the office of the comptroller continued its original functions, reporting to the state government rather than the territorial government. The vouchers provide justifications for expenditures, such as salaries for the governor, legislators, and other state officials; travel reimbursements for state legislators; payment for supplies and services; and funding for state institutions, such as the University of Alabama.

2. Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this lesson, students should be able to:

1. Identify the early governors. (See attachment and at http://www.archives.state.al.us/govslist.html

2. Identify the location of the territorial capital, temporary capital and first permanent state capital. See attachment and at http://www.archives.state.al.us/capital/capitals.html

3. Identify the first steps necessary to change from a territory to a state.

4. Compare the cost of supplies as government became more complex.

5. Compare the role of government officials then and now.

3. Suggested Activities:

1. Make copies of Documents 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 and give to students.

2. Ask students to put documents in chronological order.

3. Define "comptroller."
4. Define "census."

5. Use general suggestions for analyzing a written document.

6. Discuss requirements for becoming a state.

7. List the topics discussed in documents (census, legislature, per diem, travel, capital buildings, land military, etc.).

8. Identify the governors: territorial and state. Use textbook to check dates of tenure.

9. Using Document 8 study and discuss government income and expenses and responsibilities in 1821 and today.

10. Mapwork: Use a current Alabama road map and Document 9, the 1823 Tanner map. For younger students, use Document 10, the hand-drawn 1819 map with picture of Gov. William Wyatt Bibb.
   a. Identify places mentioned in Documents 1 - 8: towns, counties, and rivers.
   b. Look at Document 11, the list of members of the 1819 Constitutional Convention. Identify possible routes taken by territorial legislators to attend the convention in Huntsville.
   c. Discuss travel conditions at that time period.
   d. Note the "chief towns and forts" mentioned in Document 12 and compare their importance then with now.
   e. Compare the location of the Federal Road and other routes with location of modern highways. Note the correlation.

NOTES:
* Initially, the governor served a two-year term. The Alabama Constitution of 1901 set the term at four years and prohibited a governor from serving two consecutive terms. Constitutional Amendment No. 282, ratified in 1968, allows the governor to serve two consecutive terms.

 The Constitution of 1901 designated the lieutenant governor as next in line to succeed the governor followed by the president pro tem of the Senate.

 The Constitution of 1901 states that if the governor is absent from the state for more than 20 days, then the lieutenant governor shall assume the powers and duties of the governor until his return.

Authorities:
Gubernatorial Election Results, Secretary of State's Office.
As a separate territory and state since 1817, Alabama has had five capitals. Saint Stephens, in southwest Alabama, was designated in the Congressional act creating the territory as the temporary seat of government. There, two sessions of the territorial legislature met. In accordance with the enabling act for statehood, the first Constitutional Convention assembled in the north Alabama town of Huntsville in 1819, where the first session of the General Assembly was held in the same year.

The territorial legislature, however, had chosen Cahaba (also spelled Cahawba), at the confluence of the Cahaba and Alabama Rivers, as the site for the capital of the state, so the second session of the legislature met there in 1820. Cahaba also was designated as the temporary seat of government in the Constitution, which expressly gave the 1825-26 legislature the power to decide upon a permanent site. That session of the General Assembly took the opportunity to select Tuscaloosa for the new capital, deserting the oft-flooded and unhealthy Cahaba site.

Tuscaloosa was a thriving community located on the shoals of the Black Warrior River and had been a strong candidate for the capital site when Cahaba had been chosen for the honor in 1819. Serving as the home for the government beginning in 1826, however, it was increasingly inconvenient as a seat of government for the rapidly growing state. Alabama's population gains concentrated in the state's more eastern counties as Indian lands there opened to white settlement, prompting a clamor for a more centrally located capital.

An amendment approved by the voters of Alabama struck out the section of the Constitution designating the 1825-26 selection as the "permanent" site for the capital, freeing the legislature in 1846 to choose another site from among a number of competing river towns. Montgomery, on the Alabama River, won the ensuing 16-ballot contest in the General Assembly.

Andrew Dexter, one of the founders of the town, had held on to a prime piece of property in long anticipation of the capital's eventual move to Montgomery. Dubbed "Goat Hill" for its use as pasturage, the site retained that affectionate appellation despite attempts to dignify the spot with names like "Lafayette Hill" (after the 1825 visit of the Marquis de Lafayette) and "Capitol Hill" (after the 1847 construction of the Capitol).
In selecting Montgomery the legislature expressly provided that the state should be put to no expense in securing lands or in erecting a capitol building. Thus, the citizens of the town immediately organized to secure the "Goat Hill" site and begin erecting a building. Bonds for $75,000 were issued by the municipality which were taken up by local real estate dealers and investors. The Greek Revival plan of the new capitol was drawn up by Stephen D. Button; the contractors were B.F. Robinson and R.W.R. Bardwell. The completed building was presented to the state on December 6, 1847, at the beginning of the legislature's first-ever biennial session.

On December 14, 1849, near the beginning of the General Assembly's second session in Montgomery, the Capitol was destroyed by fire. Moving to temporary quarters to continue deliberations, the legislature in February of 1850 appropriated $60,000 with which the central section of the present building was erected upon the foundations of the burned original. A new architect, Barachias Holt, designed the new structure.

During the 1870-72 period several improvements were made to increase the convenience and appearance of the Capitol's lower floor, but no increase in its capacity was made from its re-erection in 1851 until 1885. In February of the latter year, the legislature appropriated $25,000 for a "needed enlargement," which became an east wing.

Another $150,000 was appropriated in 1903 to purchase the privately owned property making up the south end of the capitol square, where a south wing was erected in 1905-06. A north wing followed in 1911 when an additional $100,000 came from the legislature. An addition to the east wing was completed in 1992 as part of a major restoration and refurbishing project for the entire structure.

Dear Sirs

You will see by the above that our treasury is empty, and that we are likely to go home unrewarded for our valuable labour --we have as yet however earned but little. The committees have not yet reported. The most important measures in contemplation are the apportionment, the State Bank Charter which is now before the House tho not acted upon--the title of the Seminary lands & the established of a University in this state & the treasurers(?) Bill, which has not yet been reported.

We have not received anything from you relative to the School Section near Florence, which was intimated before I left home, & if sent on, I fear will come to hand too late to be acted on this session.

The health of this place has much improved since I arrived here, and the members generally at this time are well. Respectfully yours

Jno. Craig

CHIEF TOWNS AND FORTS.

Mobile is on the western channel of Mobile river, near its entrance into Mobile bay. It is built on a high bank, in a dry and commanding situation; but the approach to the town for vessels drawing more than eight feet of water is difficult and circuitous. The country in the rear is unsolicited pine woods. While this town was under the dominion of the French and Spaniards, it was a mere military post. When it came into possession of the United States, in 1813, it contained only 100 houses; but since the rapid progress of the settlements on the Tombigbee and Alabama, an attempt has been made to make it the depot for the produce of the country on those rivers. There is, however, a vigorous rivalry between this place and Blakely.

Blakely is on the Tombigbee, or eastern outlet of Mobile river, 10 miles E. N. E. of Mobile. It is a new town, laid out in 1813, and has considerable advantages as an emporium for commerce. The same wind that enables a vessel to enter Mobile bay will carry her to the wharves of Blakely. Another advantage is an open road to the rapidly improving country on Alabama river. Vessels drawing 12 feet of water can enter the port at full tide. The town is abundantly supplied with excellent water.

Mobile is a flourishing town in Mobile county, on Mobile creek, 12 miles north of Tensaw river. The surrounding country is fertile and annually increasing in population.

New Orleans is on the west side of the Tensaw, at the head of wharves navigation, 45 miles by land above Mobile, 172 by steam.

Catahoula, the seat of government, is at the junction of Cahaba river with the Alabama, 77 miles north-east of St. Stephens.

Eads is a French settlement on the Tombigbee, at the confluence of the Black Warrior.

Port Hadley is on the east side of Mobile river, about half way between Mobile and St. Stephens.

Port Chaffee is on the east side of the Alabama, at the head of wharves navigation, 61 miles above its junction with the Tombigbee.

Port Jefferies is near the junction of the Coosa and Tallapoosa rivers.

EDUCATION, ROADS, CANALS, &c.

When Alabama was admitted into the union in 1819, the government of the United States granted to the state, on certain conditions, one section or thirty-sixth part of every township, for the support of schools; and two sections for the establishment of an university. Five per cent. of the net produce arising from the sale of public lands is appropriated to the support of schools, and five per cent. to the establishment of an university. As the condition of these grants, the state agrees that no lands belonging to the state shall be sold for any purpose for less than five years from the day of admission at such price as will produce within the state shall for ever remain public highways, free to all the citizens of the United States without any tax or toll.

GOVERNMENT.

The constitution of the state of Alabama was adopted by a convention which met at Huntsville, in July, 1819, in pursuance of an act of congress passed in the month of March preceding. The powers of government are divided into four distinct departments. The legislative power is vested in two houses or branches of representation, together called the general assembly. The number of the house of representatives is chosen annually. No other than a citizen of the United States, who has been an inhabitant of the state at least two years, and of good moral character, can be chosen as a member of the house of representatives. Each county sends a number of representatives proportioned to its population. Senators are chosen for a term of three years, and are elected by the general assembly, composed of the house of representatives and the senate. They are elected by the people, and in addition to the qualifications required of representatives, each senator must have attained the age of 30. The executive power is vested in a governor, who is chosen by the people for a term of two years, and is not eligible for more than four terms in any term of six. He must be thirty years of age, a native citizen of the United States, and have resided in the state at least four years preceding the election. Every bill which has passed both houses is presented to the governor. If he disapproves, he returns it to the house in which it originated, with his objections. Notwithstanding which a majority of the whole number elected in each house is competent to pass it into a law. The judicial power is vested in one supreme court, the chief courts for each county, and in such inferior courts as the legislature may from time to time establish. The judges are elected by joint ballot of the assembly, hold their offices during good behavior, and receive a fixed compensation which cannot be diminished during their continuance in office. The elective franchise is vested in all white male citizens of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, citizens of the United States, who have resided in the state one year next preceding an election, and three months in the county, city, or town in which the election is held.

HISTORICAL SKETCH.

The country within the limits of the state of Alabama, although but very recently settled, is believed to have been visited by Europeans so long ago as the middle of the sixteenth century. In May 1542, Ferdinand de Soto, governor of Cuba, landed in Florida, with a considerable body of men, and led them into the interior of the country. His object was gold, and in search of this he appears to have encountered numerous difficulties, and to have traversed a vast extent of country. After passing through a series of romantic adventures, he is said to have died on the banks of the Mississippi in the year 1542.

From this period many years elapsed without any further attempt to penetrate into the country east of the Mississippi territory between the present limits of Georgia and those of Louisiana, remaining until after the middle of the eighteenth century in the same condition in which it was discovered. Scattered settlements were made within the present state of Mississippi previous to the treaty of peace and alliance with France and Britain, 1768, continued exclusively the hunting ground of savages, until a much later period. By the treaty of peace concluded in 1783, the Mississippi, in the 31st degree of north latitude, was made the western boundary of the United States, thence by a line to be drawn due east to the meridian of the head of the Indian town of Talladega; then along this meridian to its junction with the Flint river; thence straight to the head of St. Mary's river; and then down along the middle of St. Mary's river to the Atlantic ocean. This territory, containing an estimated area of 25, was claimed by Georgia, and continued under her jurisdiction until the beginning of the present century. In 1793 an act of the legislature of Georgia was passed, by which about 22 million acres of its western territory, as it was then called, were sold to certain companies for the price of 3 hundred thousand dollars, and the purchase money was paid into the treasury according to the terms of the act. The land was soon afterwards sold at an advanced price by the original purchasers to various persons, principally in the middle and eastern states. The sale of this territory excited a warm and violent opposition in Georgia. The transaction was impounded on the ground of bribery and unconstitutionality, and at the succeeding session of the legislature an act was passed, declaring the law of 1793 to be unconstitutional and void, and ordering it to be formally annulled, together with all records, acts, or proceedings relating to the sale. That part of the purchase money which had been paid was deposited in the state treasury to be returned to the purchasers upon application, and the treasury was ordered not to receive the balance. Those who had acquired titles from the original purchasers, instituted suits in the federal courts. In 1802, however, Georgia ceded to the United States all her western territory in consideration of the sum of $1,250,000, to be paid by the United States out of the first proceeds of the sales of public lands within the ceded district. The United States also engaged to extinguish at their own expense the Indian title to lands in Georgia. In this event the purchasers of the Yscapa land petitioned Congress for redress and compensation, and after considerable opposition to act was finally passed for reimbursing the claimants with funded stock called the Mississippi stock, and which was to be paid out of the proceeds of the sales of land.

In 1820, the territory which now forms the states of Mississippi and Alabama was created into a territory of the United States, with the privileges and under the restrictions usual to such governments. In 1813, that part of West Florida lying between the Pearl river and the Perdido, and which had then recently been taken possession of by the government of the United States, was annexed to the territory of Mississippi. On the 12th of April, 1812, Mobile was taken possession of by the troops under Gen. Wilkinson. After these events population began to flow into the Mississippi territory but its progress was checked by the ravages of the Indians. The Creeks and Cherokee had experienced the protection and favor of the United States to a greater extent than any other tribes but, like other savages, they found an aversion to the progress of civilization, and the intrigues of the celebrated Tecumseh stirred them up to hostilities. The first warlike proceedings arose from the Creeks and Cherokees of Georgia and the Florida. Having been joined by a number of fugitive negroes from the United States, they commenced a cruel and harassing warfare against the whites. In September, 1812, a party of volunteers from Georgia, was attacked near the Lachey towns, by a superior body of Indians but, after a sharp contest, succeeded in repulsing them. No event of greater importance occurred until the summer of the following year. Intimidated by the threats of the Indians, most of the settlers on the Alabama had taken refuge in fort temporarily erected. In one of these, called Fort Mims, a party of 139 men, with a number of women and children were collected. In August, 1813, the Indians surprised the place, and after a desperate conflict drove the garrison into the houses, to which they set fire. Those that escaped the flames were destroyed by the tomahawk, and of 200 persons only 17 escaped. This horrible outrage was followed by the ruin and devastation of the remaining settlements. The state of Tennessee immediately took measures to check the progress of the savage enemy. Twenty-five hundred militia were called out and ordered to be placed under the command of Gen. Jackson. Many of these having collected a portion of his force, joined Gen. Coffee, and marched to the Ten Islands on the Coosa. General Coffee was detached in November, with 900 men, to attack and disperse a body of the enemy at Talladega. After a desperate conflict, in which most of the Indians fell, raising the number of those killed in the pursuit, fifteen of the Americans were killed, and eighty wounded. In another quarter the Indians suffered a similar retribution. General Cocke, who commanded the detached militia of East Tennessee, dispatched Gen. White with a part of his force to the town of the Villanoe tribe. The object was accomplished, and a large number of prisoners taken. About the same time, too, the Georgia militia, under Gen. Floyd, obtained a signal victory over a body of the enemy at the Autoscope towns on the Tallapoosa.

Great discontent about this time prevailed among General Jackson's irregular troops. The term of service of most of the militia expired about the beginning of 1814, and the greater part of this force returned home. A reinforcement of 1000 mounted volunteers, however, arrived soon after, who were engaged for sixty days only. These Jackson resolved to lead against the enemy. They accordingly marched on the 15th of January, and at Talladega were joined by about 300 friendly Indians. A considerable body of the enemy was posted at a bend of the Tallapoosa, near the mouth of a creek called Emucika. After a difficult march, Jackson arrived on the evening of the 21st in the vicinity of the enemy, and encamped in a hollow square. At dawn the next morning the Indians commenced a furious onset on his left flank, and after a warm action of half an hour were repulsed. General Jackson then acted on the offensive. A general charge was made upon the enemy's line, which they were unable to resist. They took themselves to flight, and reached their fortified post with great loss. General Jackson soon after made this set out on his return to the Ten Islands. While his army was crossing the Escapopoe creek, the Indians commenced a bold and determined attack, which, however, proved abortive in consequence of the skill and gallantry of a company of artillery. Some other engagements of minor consequence afterwards occurred; but the chief action of this campaign, and that which annihilated the power of these savages, was the battle of Tallapoosa. The part had been selected by the Indians with great judgment, and fortified with uncommon skill and courage. Notwithstanding the strength of the position, however, and the resolution of the enemy, the Americans triumphed, with considerable loss on their part, but with the almost total destruction of the savages. Five hundred and fifty warriors were found dead, besides a great number who perished in the river, while only four were made prisoners. Not long after this event, peace was concluded by the total submission of the Indians, and the settlements in Alabama were freed from those harassing inroads by which their progress had been impeded.

In March, 1817, an act of congress was passed dividing the Mississippi territory, and authorizing the people of its western portion to form a state constitution. The eastern portion was then formed into a territorial government, and receive the name of Alabama. In 1818, the number of inhabitants in Alabama being sufficient to authorize its admission into the union, application was made to congress for the purpose. A bill was accordingly brought in and received the assent of both houses and of the president, in March, 1819. A convention of delegates met at Huntsville, in the month of July, 1819, and adopted a state constitution, which was laid before congress on the 6th of December following, and a resolution soon afterwards passed, declaring the admission of the state into the union.

Lesson 2: Frontier Justice

1. Background information for teachers:

The Constitution of 1819, Article IV, Section II, gave the Governor of Alabama the power to grant reprieves and pardons in all criminal and penal cases, except those of treason and impeachment, and to remit fines and forfeitures. Citizens frequently wrote to the Governor to plead for or against the pardon of a convicted criminal. The Governors' Papers contain correspondence, petitions, legal documents, etc., relating to pardons from crimes, parole from sentences and remission of fines imposed. Most items give details of the crime, and of the criminals' background and family life. The Secretary of State kept a record of pardon and parole certificates issued by the Governor.

2. Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this lesson, students should be able to:

1. Identify legal terms and explain their meaning.
2. Identify constitutional powers given to the governor relative to crimes committed.
3. Explain the meaning of "pardon and parole."
4. Explain the role of the Secretary of State in relation to pardons and paroles.
5. Compare frontier punishment, (branding, pillory, 39 lashes) with today.

3. Suggested activities:

1. Make copies of Documents 1, 1a, 1b, 2, 2a, 2b, and 2c and distribute to students.
2. Give the students about five to seven minutes to read the cases and petitions.
3. Define unfamiliar words and legal terms (or have students look them up) such as:
4. Divide the class into two groups. Assign one of the cases to each group.
5. Ask each student to record:
   a. the prisoner's name
   b. crime
   c. date convicted
   d. sentence
   e. the governor's name
   f. statement approving parole
   g. date
   h. the name of the Secretary of State.

6. Give each group time to discuss their case among themselves and vote on whether they think the person charged with the crime deserved to be pardoned. Select one student from each group to report their conclusions on their case to the class.

7. Let the students vote on:
   a. which crime they think is most severe
   b. if the punishment was fair
   c. if the person should have been pardoned

8. Ask the students to write a paragraph explaining how they analyzed their case and how they came to their conclusions.

aiders and abettors of one Samuel Nixon, in committing an assault, and battery, and mayhem in biting off the left ear of one James A. Moore on the 25th December last, and who were severally fined and sentenced to stand on the pillory, to be executed on the first, second, and third days of June next, that the said persons (p.38) were of good peaceable characters; and it being represented that these persons were accidentally present when the affray hap-pened between the principal parties without any preconcert; and at the time of their encouraging the said Nixon as his friends in the fight, they did not know that he was perform-ing any such desperate and abominable act as that of mutila-ing his adversary—No copy, or certificate of the proceedings, or sentence, being yet laid before me—and it being understood that the principal perpetrator is not yet surrendered to justice, though in the vicinity, I am not prepared to act definitively on the case.
Now therefore, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, by the constitution and laws of this state, I do hereby respite and suspend so much of the sentence as respects corporal pun-ishment, or pillory, all the third Monday after the fourth Mon-day of September next, and the collection of the fines is also sus-pended till that day. Cash being paid by the defendants; and their recognizances taken with good security for their several ap-pearances on that day and for payment of the fines.
Given under my hand and seal of the State this 26th day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-

His Excellency Israel Pickens

At the April Term of the Circuit Court of Morgan County. (Alabama)
Adam Lowrey was convicted of Hog stealing for which he was sentenced, and received on his bare back twenty five lashes. At the same Term he was charged with Horse stealing and on his arraignment he plead guilty. And was sentenced to be branded in the hand and to receive thirty nine stripes. He was branded in the presence of the court and the balance of the sentence was respited for six weeks.

It was the opinion of Judge Ellis and the attorney General (as will be shewn to you) that Lowrey was and is an object of Executive Clemency. Lowrey is a very poor man, has a wife & seven small children, who are at the present in very deprest circumstances. He appears very penitent promises reformation, and that he will go to work for the releif of his family. He has lay in Jail from about christmas last as far as I have had the opinion of the community, it appears about this. That if the punishment already inflicted will not work the desired reformation, that nothing short of death will.

I have the honor to be your Excellency's Obedient Humble servant
W Gray Sheriff of Morgan County.

P.S. I here take the liberty of stating to your Excellency, that Judge Kelly, who defended Lowrey, wrote to you, in substance nearly the same as stated by Judge Ellis & Major Eastland, but by some means has been lost in my office.

M. Gray

The sentence of the sentence is been requested for due notice from this day for the Elementary of your Excellency should you deem it expedient. The prisoner has been confined in jail three months prior to this time, it was believed that if the great object and end of humane punishment was reform and reformation of the individuals, which object ends have been obtained, perhaps as far as this mode of punishment can effect it. The opinion is that the remaining part of the sentence which is imprisonment and trampling upon body in a pit subject of confiscation money without any injury to the principal stock and you have the power to do your business of my business for the Governor of the State.

Lesson 3: Alabama Fever

Background information for teachers:

After the Revolutionary War, the U.S. Government established laws to survey and sell land gained from Britain. The area that became Alabama was originally part of the Mississippi Territory from 1798 to 1817. Many settlers arrived in the area before government lands had been surveyed. Unable to buy, they simply picked a location, built a cabin, cleared fields, and put in crops. Such families were called squatters. Land laws were passed to provide legal title to land for settlers who already lived on the land. Some settlers claimed land by British or Spanish land grants, and others were squatters who claimed land by right of pre-emption.

Starting in 1804, U. S. Land Offices were established to sell land in the area which would become Alabama. By law federal land was sold to the highest bidders at public auctions. Alabama sales attracted men from all over the nation, many of them speculators. Groups of speculators bought large tracts, sometimes for as little as $10 an acre, then resold at $20 to $100 an acre. When an auction ended, poorer migrants could buy less desirable land for as little as $2 an acre. The smallest amount one person could buy was 160 acres. Under the Land Law of 1800 a purchaser could put one-fourth down and pay the rest off over three years. But when the price of cotton fell to eighteen cents a pound, few could meet payments on land bought at inflated prices. By 1820, Alabama owed the federal government $11 million—more than half of the national land debt. In 1820 and 1821 Congress passed new laws to deal with this problem. The Land Law of 1820 required future buyers to pay the entire amount in cash but lowered the minimums to $1.25 an acre and 80 acres. Those already in debt were aided by the Relief Act of 1821 which permitted them to keep part of their land and return the rest to the government or buy it all on the installment plan at reduced rates.

2. Learning Objectives:

Upon completion of this lesson, student should be able to:

1. Describe life on the frontier in early Alabama.

2. Identify topics important to early settlers (land, cotton, politics, news of home).

3. Explain the impact of geography on development of population centers.

4. Describe peaceful interaction with Native Americans.

5. Explain the government's role in sale of public land.

3. Suggested activity:

Document 1 will be useful for discussing what life was like on the frontier in early Alabama.

1. Make copies of Document 1 and distribute to students.

2. Give them a few minutes to read the letter or you may read the letter to the class while students follow silently.

3. Give each student a copy of Worksheet 1 to complete by using the information in the letter. You may wish to have your class work in pairs or small groups.

4. Ask students to identify the person who wrote the letter and the person to whom it was addressed.

5. Ask students to make a list of all the topics discussed in the letter.

6. Ask students to describe the writer, i.e. educated, poor, adventurous, resourceful, etc.

7. Discuss why the writer complained about the lack of news. What other clue did you find that indicated that the writer was relatively isolated and that news of any kind was highly desirable?

8. Using a current highway map of Alabama, ask students to locate the home of the writer.

9. Using an atlas, ask students to compare the geographic features of the Alabama towns with those in Virginia. What makes both locations important?

10. What references indicate that settlers and Indians were not always at war?

11. How did the writer describe the land where he lived?

12. What does "staple of our country" mean? Why is this important?

13. Where, how and why did the writer ship his produce to market? Why is this significant in view of "sectionalism" that developed in Alabama?

14. Compare the writer's view of the land relief act with the purpose of the laws described above.
15. Explain, or ask students to look up, "squatter," pre-emption, land grant, auction.

16. Who is the writer encouraging to move to Alabama? How will he help to make their move easier?

17. Ask students to assume the role of one of the people mentioned in the letter and to write a letter describing his/her preparations for moving to Alabama.
