In 2013, the average score of fourth-grade students in Albuquerque was 235. This was not significantly different from the average score of 235 for public school students in large cities.

The average score for students in Albuquerque in 2013 (235) was not significantly different from their average score in 2011 (235).

The score gap between higher performing students in Albuquerque (those at the 75th percentile) and lower performing students (those at the 25th percentile) was 43 points in 2013. This performance gap was not significantly different from that in 2011 (42 points).

The percentage of students in Albuquerque who performed at or above the NAEP Proficient level was 34 percent in 2013. This percentage was not significantly different from that in 2011 (34 percent).

The percentage of students in Albuquerque who performed at or above the NAEP Basic level was 75 percent in 2013. This percentage was not significantly different from that in 2011 (76 percent).

In 2013, Hispanic students had an average score that was 24 points lower than White students. This performance gap was not significantly different from that in 2011 (25 points).

In 2013, male students in Albuquerque had an average score that was not significantly different from female students.

In 2013, students who were eligible for free/reduced-price school lunch, an indicator of low family income, had an average score that was 26 points lower than students who were not eligible. This performance gap was not significantly different from that in 2011 (26 points).

NOTE: Beginning in 2009, results for charter schools are excluded from the TUDA results if they are not included in the school district’s Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP) report to the U.S. Department of Education. Statistical comparisons are calculated on the basis of unrounded scale scores or percentages.